Playing with light

The flat tax

The future of the flat tax might lie in countries which, like the East Europeans, are moving from the plan to the market, says DEEPAK LAL

MOOT POINT

Why are you poor?

You are poor because

Pension on fulfilling social obligations: The second most important reason

The state is trying to maintain the level of public expenditure, so social security will be maintained. This will provide a chance to increase the number of people who are poor. The state will have to provide finance for the optimal provision of goods and services to the population. There is then no need to resist it. The backtracking on the provision of goods and services will be minimal, and the state will be able to provide them in a more effective way.

The state is trying to maintain the level of public expenditure, so social security will be maintained. This will provide a chance to increase the number of people who are poor. The state will have to provide finance for the optimal provision of goods and services to the population. There is then no need to resist it. The backtracking on the provision of goods and services will be minimal, and the state will be able to provide them in a more effective way.

The state is trying to maintain the level of public expenditure, so social security will be maintained. This will provide a chance to increase the number of people who are poor. The state will have to provide finance for the optimal provision of goods and services to the population. There is then no need to resist it. The backtracking on the provision of goods and services will be minimal, and the state will be able to provide them in a more effective way.

The state is trying to maintain the level of public expenditure, so social security will be maintained. This will provide a chance to increase the number of people who are poor. The state will have to provide finance for the optimal provision of goods and services to the population. There is then no need to resist it. The backtracking on the provision of goods and services will be minimal, and the state will be able to provide them in a more effective way.