Reliance rally

The Reliance Settlement finally pushed the Sensex briefly over 3,000 on Tuesday, May 24, and it ended the day at an all-time high of 3,003.91. This rally, however, was the Reliance Settlement's last gasp for the markets. By Thursday, the Sensex was back below 2,900.

I own stocks in Reliance Industries and in Bombay Dyeing. The market rally on Tuesday was mainly a continuation of a rally that started in the last week of April. In the last four and a half weeks, the Sensex has risen by 12.5 per cent (20.8 per cent from the low of May 5), and the Bombay Dyeing shares have risen by 68 per cent.

This rise in the market has been fuelled by the news of the Reliance Settlement. This settlement has been described as a “landmark agreement” and a “major milestone” by the market. The market has been waiting for this settlement for a long time, and it has been looking towards this for a long time.

But this rally has been short-lived. On Wednesday, the market fell by 3.5 per cent, and it has fallen by 1.7 per cent on Thursday. The market has been looking forward to this rally, and it has been looking forward to this news. But the market has been looking forward to this news for a long time, and it has been looking forward to this news for a long time.

Some people have been predicting that the market would rally on this news, and some people have been predicting that the market would rally on this news. But the market has been looking forward to this news for a long time, and it has been looking forward to this news for a long time.

Why companies fall for myths

Why companies fall for myths

Sonia's choice

The National Party, which used to rule between 1990 and 1998, built its image as a party of the poor. It still feels that way, even if it no longer claims to be a party of the poor.

Many companies are now using the internet to offer their products and services. The internet is a powerful tool for companies to reach their customers. But many companies are still using traditional methods to sell their products.

The internet is a powerful tool for companies to reach their customers. But many companies are still using traditional methods to sell their products.

Many companies are now using the internet to offer their products and services. The internet is a powerful tool for companies to reach their customers. But many companies are still using traditional methods to sell their products.